The National Institute for Law and Justice (NILJ) is a registered 501(c)3 nonprofit organization co-founded by retired NYPD Detective, Mark Pucci and entrepreneur / author, Kiersten Hathcock. Over the past 30 years, the co-founders have seen countless families struggle to afford investigative services while searching for answers regarding missing loved ones (adults & children), unexplained / suspicious deaths, misclassified suicides, homicides (current & cold case), and missing, murdered Indigenous women / children / people (MMIP) cases.

With this in mind, NILJ was created to fund investigations and has partnered with a national network of current and retired federal, state & local law enforcement professionals, private sector investigators, forensic specialists, crime scene, ballistics, ground, air, canine search teams, dive teams, former state, federal prosecutors, financial crime analysts / retired special forces trackers, and non-traditional investigative specialists who all work in coordination to investigate these cases and help victim's families to find answers at NO COST to the families.
